

Rivers Trusts unite at show for first time

A GROUP of Rivers Trusts based across the south came together to volunteer at the South of England show for the first time this year.

The Arun and Rother Rivers Trust, Ouse and Adur Rivers Trust and South East Rivers Trust worked together under one marquee, sharing their work, concerns and plans with around 150 visitors to the agricultural show.

Sir Sebastian Anstruther, chairman of the Arun and Rother Rivers Trust, said: "Attending this popular show gave us an opportunity to meet people and talk about what we aim to achieve.

"We have much to do to protect and improve our rivers in the south and by working with the neighbouring rivers trusts, local people and other interest groups, I am convinced that even the most complex issues can be addressed."
